WORLD       U.S.       N.Y. / REGION       BUSINESS       TECHNOLOGY       SCIENCE       HEALTH       SPORTS       OPINION       ARTS       STYLE       TRAVEL       JOBS       REAL ESTATE         Property Search       For Sale       For Rent       Min. Price ($)       Max. Price ($)       Bedrooms       Property Type       More In Real Estate       Great Homes       Commercial       Destinations       Real Estate       Commercial       Destinations	The New Hork Times Real Estate									Times.com	Go
Property Search       For Sale       For Retul       Min. Price (s)       Mary       Any       Any<	WORLD U.S. N.Y. / REGION	I BUSINESS 1					OPINION	ARTS	STYLE	TRAVEI	JOBS		J	AUTO
Prover Oper Proces       New Downlogments    FACEBOOK TUTTER GOODER- SAVE FUNCT FORMATION CONCLUST SECTION CONCLUST FORMATION CONCLUST SECTION C			t Min. Price ($	) Max. Prie	ce ($) Be	drooms	Property Typ	be	More Great	In Real Homes	Estate Commer	cial		OPERT
A Calumas       SAVE         B calestate days 20.000       SAVE         Concerving a c	Help / FAQ		Show Only:	Open House	es New	Developments	5		& Desi	linations	Real Esta	ate
TUITER GOOLE- AVE E-MAL SAVE E-MAL E-M
Subject       Super-         Aska Question       Super-         Subject questions for redestate qoe mytimes cont.       Powners in our eight-unit condominium building have had problems trying to sell their apartments because banks will not in do potential buyers when owner- occupancy drops below 50 percent. Further or a A Columns =       Super-         Connect Witt For Q & A Columns =       Powner in our or our units are avary or observer trying to sell their apartments because banks will not in do potential buyers when owner- occupancy drops below 50 percent. Further our coupled and four are re reint is should we amend our bytaws to ake sure that owner-occupancy is aways above 50 percent? Is this legal?         As to gal, and amending the bylaws probably makes sense, said Matthew J. Zangwill as the leaver in Uniondale.         Wr. Zangwill said that the writer was correct in stating that lenders are generally hesitant to provide financing in buildings with a high percentage of nonowner-occupied apartments. "And the problem can be exacerbated when a condominium has a small number of units like this one," he said.         Mr. Zangwill said that it is possible for unit owners to make the building more attractive to lenders by amending the condominium bylaws to limit the percentage of apartments that can be rented out, or even eliminating the right to do so entirely. But he noted that state law requires an affirmative vote of a theast two-thirds of unit owners to ament the condominium's governing documents. Because four apartments are already rented out, it						FACEE	BOOK
SAVE         Public May 22, 2013         Too Many Condo Units Rented Out         Submit (questions to realestanceq@mytimes.com.         Submit (questions to realestanceq@mytimes.com.         Connect With You & A Columns >         Connect With You Way 2014         You Part A Columns >         Connect With You Part A Columns A Column A						TWITT	ER
Q & A       E-MAL         Publiched: May 23, 2013       SHARE         Too Many Condo Units Rented Out       SHARE         Ask a Question Submit questions to realestate, ad@mytimes.com.       Q Owners in our eight-unit condominium building have had problems trying to sell their apartments because banks will not hed to potential buyers when owner- occupancy drops below 50 percent?       Reprents         To mess and features on real state, follow       Image: State and the optimes of the op						GOOG	LE+
Publiched: May 23, 2013       SHARE         Too Many Condo Units Rented Out       Image: Condominium building have had problems trying to sell their apartments because banks will not lend to potential buyers when owner occupancy drops below 50 percent. Right now four of our units are state. Rilow       Image: Condominium building have had problems trying to sell their apartments because banks will not lend to potential buyers when owner occupancy drops below 50 percent. Right now four of our units are state. Rilow       Image: Condominium building have had problems trying to sell their apartments because banks will not lend to potential buyers when owner occupancy drops below 50 percent. Right now four of our units are state. Rilow       Image: Condominium building have had problems trying to sell their apartments are state. Solution we amend our bylaws to make sure that owner-occupancy is always above 50 percent? Is this legal?         At Is legal, and amending the bylaws probably makes sense, said Matthew J. Zangwill, a real estate lawyer in Uniondale.       Image: Condominium has a small mumber of units like this one," he said.         Mr. Zangwill said that the writer was correct in stating that lenders are generally hesitant to provide financing in buildings with a high percentage of nonowner-occupied apartments. "And the problem can be exacerbated when a condominium has a small number of units like this one," he said.         Mr. Zangwill said that th t is possible for unit owners to make the building more attractive to lenders by amending the condominium bylaws to limit the percentage of apartments that can be rented out, or even eliminating the right to do so entirely. But he noted that state hav requires an affirmative vote of at least two- thirds of unit owners to amend the condominium's governing documents. Becaus						SAVE		1
Too Many Condo Units Rented Out         Ask a Question Submit questions to realestateque@rytimes.com.         Ask a Question Submit questions to realestateque@rytimes.com.         More Q & A Columns >         Connect With For news and features on real estate. follow @rytrealestate.         For the start or all submit questions to role start and the problem can be exacerbably makes sense, said Matthew J. Zangwill, a real estate lawyer in Uniondale.         Mr. Zangwill said that the writer was correct in stating that lenders are generally hesitant to provide financing in buildings with a high percentage of nonowner-occupied apartments. "And the problem can be exacerbated when a condominium has a small number of units like this one," he said.         Mr. Zangwill said that it is possible for unit owners to make the building more attractive to lenders by amending the condominium bylaws to limit the percentage of a partments that can be rented out, or even eliminating the right to do so entirely. But he noted that state law requires an affirmative vote of at least two-thirds of unit owners to amend the condominium's governing documents. Because four apartments are already rented out, it	•					E-MAIL	-
Ask a Question         Submit questions to realestateq@Rytimes.con.         More Q & A Columns >         Connect With For news and features on real estate, follow         For example         With realestate         Ask a Question         With realestate         Submit questions to realestate, follow         With realestate         For news and features on real estate, follow         Submit questions to realestate, follow         With realestate         Ast is legal, and amending the bylaws probably makes sense, said Matthew J. Zangwill, a real estate lawyer in Uniondale.         Mr. Zangwill said that the writer was correct in stating that lenders are generally hesitant to provide financing in buildings with a high percentage of nonowner-occupied apartments. "And the problem can be exacerbated when a condominium has a small number of units like this one," he said.         Mr. Zangwill said that it is possible for unit owners to make the building more attractive to lenders by amending the condominium bylaws to limit the percentage of apartments that can be rented out, or even eliminating the right to do so entirely. But he noted that state law requires an affirmative vote of at least two-thirds of unit owners to amend the condominium's governing documents. Because four apartments are already rented out, it
Ask a Question       Q Owners in our eight-unit         Submit questions to realestatega@nytimes.con.       Q Owners in our eight-unit         Submit questions to realestatega@nytimes.con.       Q Owners in our eight-unit         More Q & A Columns >       Q Owners in our eight-unit         Connect With ys on Twitter For news and features on real estate, follow       Q Owners to below 50 percent.         Right now four of our units are owner-occupied and four are rented out. Should we amend our bylaws to make sure that owner-occupancy is always above 50 percent? Is this legal?         A It is legal, and amending the bylaws probably makes sense, said Matthew J. Zangwill, a real estate lawyer in Uniondale.         Mr. Zangwill said that the writer was correct in stating that lenders are generally hesitant to provide financing in buildings with a high percentage of nonowner-occupied apartments. "And the problem can be exacerbated when a condominium has a small number of units like this one," he said.         Mr. Zangwill said that it is possible for unit owners to make the building more attractive to lenders by amending the condominium bylaws to limit the percentage of apartments that can be rented out, or even eliminating the right to do so entirely. But he noted that state law requires an affirmative vote of at least two-thirds of unit owners to amend the condominium's governing documents. Because four apartments are already rented out, it	Too Many Condo Units Rented Out					h (99)
Submit questions to realestateqa@nytimes.com.       Image: Concent With problems trying to sell their apartments because banks will not lend to potential buyers when owner occupancy drops below 50 percent. Right now four of our units are owner-occupied and four are rented out. Should we amend our bylaws to make sure that owner-occupancy is always above 50 percent? Is this legal?         A It is legal, and amending the bylaws probably makes sense, said Matthew J. Zangwill, a real estate lawyer in Uniondale.         Mr. Zangwill said that the writer was correct in stating that lenders are generally hesitant to provide financing in buildings with a high percentage of nonowner-occupied apartments. "And the problem can be exacerbated when a condominium has a small number of units like this one," he said.         Mr. Zangwill said that it is possible for unit owners to make the building more attractive to lenders by amending the condominium bylaws to limit the percentage of apartments that can be rented out, or even eliminating the right to do so entirely. But he noted that state law requires an affirmative vote of at least two-thirds of unit owners to amend the condominium's governing documents. Because four apartments are already rented out, it	Ask a Question	-	condominium building have had
<ul> <li>A Li is legal, and amending the bylaws probably makes sense, said Matthew J. Zangwill, a real estate lawyer in Uniondale.</li> <li>Mr. Zangwill said that the writer was correct in stating that lenders are generally hesitant to provide financing in buildings with a high percentage of nonowner-occupied apartments. "And the problem can be exacerbated when a condominium has a small number of units like this one," he said.</li> <li>Mr. Zangwill said that it is possible for unit owners to make the building more attractive to lenders by amending the right to do so entirely. But he noted that state law requires an affirmative vote of at least two-thirds of unit owners to amend the condominium's governing documents. Because four apartments are already rented out, it</li> </ul>	-
More Q & A Columns >       Ind to potential buyers when owner occupancy drops below 50 percent. Right now four of our units are owner-occupied and four are rented out. Should we amend our bylaws to make sure that owner-occupancy is always above 50 percent? Is this legal?         A It is legal, and amending the bylaws probably makes sense, said Matthew J. Zangwill, a real estate lawyer in Uniondale.         Mr. Zangwill said that the writer was correct in stating that lenders are generally hesitant to provide financing in buildings with a high percentage of nonowner-occupied apartments. "And the problem can be exacerbated when a condominium has a small number of units like this one," he said.         Mr. Zangwill said that it is possible for unit owners to make the building more attractive to lenders by amending the condominium bylaws to limit the percentage of apartments that can be rented out, or even eliminating the right to do so entirely. But he noted that state law requires an affirmative vote of at least two-thirds of unit owners to amend the condominium's governing documents. Because four apartments are already rented out, it		-			l not
Connect With Us on Twitter For news and features on real estate, follow       Fight now four of our units are owner-occupied and four are rented out. Should we amend our bylaws to make sure that owner-occupancy is always above 50 percent? Is this legal?         A It is legal, and amending the bylaws probably makes sense, said Matthew J. Zangwill, a real estate lawyer in Uniondale.         Mr. Zangwill said that the writer was correct in stating that lenders are generally hesitant to provide financing in buildings with a high percentage of nonowner-occupied apartments. "And the problem can be exacerbated when a condominium has a small number of units like this one," he said.         Mr. Zangwill said that it is possible for unit owners to make the building more attractive to lenders by amending the condominium bylaws to limit the percentage of apartments that can be rented out, or even eliminating the right to do so entirely. But he noted that state law requires an affirmative vote of at least two-thirds of unit owners to amend the condominium's governing documents. Because four apartments are already rented out, it	More Q & A Columns »	-
<ul> <li>A It is legal, and amending the bylaws probably makes sense, said Matthew J. Zangwill, a real estate follow</li> <li>Mr. Zangwill said that the writer was correct in stating that lenders are generally hesitant to provide financing in buildings with a high percentage of nonowner-occupied apartments. "And the problem can be exacerbated when a condominium has a small number of units like this one," he said.</li> <li>Mr. Zangwill said that it is possible for unit owners to make the building more attractive to lenders by amending the condominium bylaws to limit the percentage of apartments that can be rented out, or even eliminating the right to do so entirely. But he noted that state law requires an affirmative vote of at least two-thirds of unit owners to amend the condominium's governing documents. Because four apartments are already rented out, it</li> </ul>	Us on Twitter For news and features on real estate, follow		Right now four of our units are owner-occupied and four are rented out. Should we amend our bylaws to
Image: State of the state						Ē
@nytrealestate.       Indice sure that owner-occupantly is always above 50 percent? Is this legal?         A It is legal, and amending the bylaws probably makes sense, said Matthew J. Zangwill, a real estate lawyer in Uniondale.         Mr. Zangwill said that the writer was correct in stating that lenders are generally hesitant to provide financing in buildings with a high percentage of nonowner-occupied apartments. "And the problem can be exacerbated when a condominium has a small number of units like this one," he said.         Mr. Zangwill said that it is possible for unit owners to make the building more attractive to lenders by amending the condominium bylaws to limit the percentage of apartments that can be rented out, or even eliminating the right to do so entirely. But he noted that state law requires an affirmative vote of at least two-thirds of unit owners to amend the condominium's governing documents. Because four apartments are already rented out, it		out. Sho
A It is legal, and amending the bylaws probably makes sense, said Matthew J. Zangwill, a real estate lawyer in Uniondale. Mr. Zangwill said that the writer was correct in stating that lenders are generally hesitant to provide financing in buildings with a high percentage of nonowner-occupied apartments. "And the problem can be exacerbated when a condominium has a small number of units like this one," he said. Mr. Zangwill said that it is possible for unit owners to make the building more attractive to lenders by amending the condominium bylaws to limit the percentage of apartments that can be rented out, or even eliminating the right to do so entirely. But he noted that state law requires an affirmative vote of at least two-thirds of unit owners to amend the condominium's governing documents. Because four apartments are already rented out, it a real estate lawyer in Uniondale. Mr. Zangwill said that the writer was correct in stating that lenders are generally hesitant to provide financing in buildings with a high percentage of nonowner-occupied apartments. "And the problem can be exacerbated when a condominium has a small number of units like this one," he said. Mr. Zangwill said that it is possible for unit owners to make the building more attractive to lenders by amending the condominium bylaws to limit the percentage of apartments that can be rented out, or even eliminating the right to do so entirely. But he noted that state law requires an affirmative vote of at least two-thirds of unit owners to amend the condominium's governing documents. Because four apartments are already rented out, it		, c	-		U
Mr. Zangwill said that the writer was correct in stating that lenders are generally hesitant to provide financing in buildings with a high percentage of nonowner-occupied apartments. "And the problem can be exacerbated when a condominium has a small number of units like this one," he said. Mr. Zangwill said that it is possible for unit owners to make the building more attractive to lenders by amending the condominium bylaws to limit the percentage of apartments that can be rented out, or even eliminating the right to do so entirely. But he noted that state law requires an affirmative vote of at least two-thirds of unit owners to amend the condominium's governing documents. Because four apartments are already rented out, it	0	0	probably ma	kes sense,	, said Ma	atthew J.	Zangwill, hesitant to provide financing in buildings with a high percentage of nonowner-occupied apartments. "And the problem can be exacerbated when a condominium has a small number of units like this one," he said. Mr. Zangwill said that it is possible for unit owners to make the building more attractive to lenders by amending the condominium bylaws to limit the percentage of apartments that can be rented out, or even eliminating the right to do so entirely. But he noted that state law requires an affirmative vote of at least two-thirds of unit owners to amend the condominium's governing documents. Because four apartments are already rented out, it	· apartments. "And the problem can be exacerbated when a condominium has a small number of units like this one," he said. Mr. Zangwill said that it is possible for unit owners to make the building more attractive to lenders by amending the condominium bylaws to limit the percentage of apartments that can be rented out, or even eliminating the right to do so entirely. But he noted that state law requires an affirmative vote of at least two-thirds of unit owners to amend the condominium's governing documents. Because four apartments are already rented out, it	-			-		-	-
Mr. Zangwill said that it is possible for unit owners to make the building more attractive to lenders by amending the condominium bylaws to limit the percentage of apartments that can be rented out, or even eliminating the right to do so entirely. But he noted that state law requires an affirmative vote of at least two-thirds of unit owners to amend the condominium's governing documents. Because four apartments are already rented out, it	=	-		-	-		- to lenders by amending the condominium bylaws to limit the percentage of apartments that can be rented out, or even eliminating the right to do so entirely. But he noted that state law requires an affirmative vote of at least two-thirds of unit owners to amend the condominium's governing documents. Because four apartments are already rented out, it	number of units like this	one," he said.
that can be rented out, or even eliminating the right to do so entirely. But he noted that state law requires an affirmative vote of at least two-thirds of unit owners to amend the condominium's governing documents. Because four apartments are already rented out, it	Mr. Zangwill said that it	is possible for	unit owners	to make t	he build	ing more	attractive state law requires an affirmative vote of at least two-thirds of unit owners to amend the condominium's governing documents. Because four apartments are already rented out, it	• •		-		- condominium's governing documents. Because four apartments are already rented out, it may be difficult for the owner-occupants to get the votes necessary to make the change.	condominium's governin	g documents.	Because four	apartmen	nts are al	ready ren	ted out, it may be difficult for the o	wner-occupan	its to get the	votes nece	essary to	make the	e change.							